Newton Police Told to Call Doctors

Mayor Edwin O. Childs of Newton made public a statement today concerning the case of Lieutenant William Moulton, charged with neglect of duty. John W. Murphy, assistant police officer, refused to call doctors in emergency cases on two occasions. The mayor decided, "Although the evidence produced by Mr. Murphy against Lieutenant Moulton is true, I exonerate the officer from any blame, because at the hour in the morning that these cases happened, the lieutenant was alone in the station house, and had as much work as one man could handle, taking care of routine matters. Nevertheless, in the future any case of this kind will be taken care of by the police if they are notified."

Big Western Snow Storm Coming East

CHICAGO, March 5.—The heavy snow of yesterday throughout the Upper Mississippi Valley west from the Great Lakes, continued without letup today and the stormy weather was slowly pushing eastward. From the Canadian line to Oklahoma train schedules were interrupted, as the wind drifted the snow into railroad cuts. The depth of snowfall varied from four feet in Nebraska to one foot at Kansas City and six to two feet over the remainder of the territory.

DECLARE THE Dacia WAR PRIZE

LONDON, March 5.—The American steamer Dacia was today officially proclaimed a French war prize, it is announced in a dispatch from Paris. The French ministry of marine issued the following statement:

"The steamer Dacia was seized by the auxiliary cruiser Europe, and the maritime prize of Dacia has been pronounced her capture legal. The proceedings are following their normal course."

THREE SUBMARINES SUNK

There was rejoicing throughout England today when the news was flashed to all parts of the United Kingdom that the German submarine U-3 had been sunk in the English Channel.

Although it had been reported that from two to six German submarines had been destroyed, the landing of the crew of the U-3 at Dover was the first tangible evidence that any German submarine had been sunk.

When the first news of the loss of the U-3 was received from Paris, where it had been announced by the French Ministry of Marine, there was a feeling of deep regret that the submarine had not been captured.

REPORT FLIGHT OF SULTAN

LONDON, March 5.—The gigantic naval action by which the Anglo-French fleet is trying to force the Dardanelles and open up the way to Constantinople has been extended until now the engagement stretches along the coast of Asia Minor and the coast of the peninsula of Gallipoli, fringing the Aegean Sea.

France and England are at the same time marshalling an army estimated at 100,000 men on the Dardanelles littoral, and this force will be commanded by General D'Amade, former commander of the French forces in Morocco. General D'Amade was in command of the French army that was rushed into northern France to outflank the Germans when the Teutonic host began its retreat after the battle of the Marne.

TEHRAN IS CONSTANTINOPLE. A Turkish army of equal strength has been organized on both sides of the Dardanelles, near the junction of the Bosporus and the Bosphorus.

BRITISH AND FRENCH ARMY OF 100,000 MEN TO ATTACK CONSTANTINOPLE

Great Fleet Continues Bombardment of the Inner Dardanelles Fords.

While the warships inside of the Dardanelles were pounding away at the inner forts, the British warship, Dubouche, shelled and destroyed a Turkish observation station on the peninsula of Gallipoli, and the warship Saphire bombarded a Turkish concentration camp inland from the Gulf of Adramy, putting troops to flight. French battleships attacked the inner forts and destroyed a bridge over the Kavay River, preventing troops' movements in that vicinity.

A range of terror is reported in Constantinople, and it is said that the Sultan has left the city for the interior of Asia Minor. An uprising is threatened against the leaders of the Young Turk party, who are held responsible for Turkey's latest move in the war.

The ten warships that bombarded the inner Turkish works all day Thursday concentrated their fire against the Forts of Naugra and Kilit Bazar. Vice-Admiral Sackville H. Carden, commander of the international fleet, reports in official dispatches, that at least forty Turkish gunners were destroyed by the cannonading of the war fleet.

FEET WORKS IN RELAYS.

Although the Turkish military authorities minimize the importance of the allied victory, declaring that the Turkish forts at the western entrance of the Dardanelles were old and insecure, British and French naval experts who are acquainted with the conditions on the Dardanelles express the opinion that there are only two remaining works of any consequence.

Working ships in relay, the fleet which is smashing the Turkish defenses has been able thus far to carry out minutely the plan of Vice-Admiral Carden. But while the ships have been able to generate the waterway for fifteen miles they have still got a difficult stretch to navigate. The Bosphorus, which lies between the Sea of Marmora and the

"The neglect to communicate immediately with the police upon the discovery of the thefts and the added fact that the Colles were permitted to leave Boston with the consent and approval of the Collateral Loan Company, show a lack of respect for the law and duty constituted public authority that is surprising in men charged with the high responsibility of these officers."

as to warrant the theory that one of the men struck which resulted in his falling down the stairs to his death?

"Yes," the doctor answered.

"I can't conceive of him falling down the stairs from merely natural causes," Dr. Weaver continued, in response to a question by N. C. Haines of counsel for the defense. "If he had fallen naturally it is more than likely that he would have landed on his side. The fracture of the skull, which caused death, resulted in a direct contact. Unless he landed down the stairs I don't see how this fracture could have resulted."

SAY DEAD COOK GIRL'S EMPLOYER ADMITTED LIVING DUAL LIFE

 at Lewis & Maycock's undertaking rooms.
 The statement of Detective Captain Donnelly about the possibility of a warrant injected an added element of mystery in this tragedy of a girl's life. The first explanation given out by the police was that the girl committed suicide. The revolver found beside her was identified as one which had been in the office of the May Radiator Company, where the girl worked. But, until this weapon was identified, no mention had been made of its being missing from the office although the girl had been away a week. A poison tablet was found in a case attached to the girl's theory of suicide. But the autopsy order of Coroner Mayo, head of the police department, today has cast new speculation about the case from a more sinister angle.

A brief statement by Coroner Mayo, who is in charge of the investigation, said that the authorities expect to uncover the truth of the mystery in a few days. The result of the autopsy will determine the cause of the girl's death. The coroner said: "I think there will be no doubt about the suicide. By the way, I am not sure about the matter than that at present."

WOMAN HEAD BOOKKEEPER.
 A subpoena was issued by Coroner Mayo for Miss Helen Wilson, head bookkeeper in the office of the May Radiator Company, who was in direct charge of Miss Cook's duties in the May factory.

Miss Wilson is said to have been called last person to see Miss Cook alive. On the day that she disappeared she left the factory with Miss Wilson and a friend, and they were seen in the city, where Miss Wilson left the girl and went to her home.

The Cook girl went directly to the Young Woman's Christian Association, where she arranged her effects and left a note for Miss Wilson, telling her of her intention to take her life.

Miss Wilson, upon receipt of the information, immediately called Mr. Mayo on the long distance telephone in Washington, where he was on a business trip. In an attempt to obtain government contracts for the manufacture of hydrocyanic acid, he hurried home from Washington and immediately offered a reward for the recovery of Miss Cook, dead or alive. At the time, it was believed that the confidential agent of Mr. Mayo at the factory, and it was believed that she could tell many facts which the coroner would like to know.

Frank Cook, father of the dead girl, who came from Brooklyn last night, was permitted to see the body this morning, permission having been refused by the coroner last night, owing to the late hour of his arrival in this city.

It was learned today that the police and authorities are directing a thorough investigation into the life and habits of May.

Dispatches from Brooklyn today said that the dead girl's mother, Mrs. Frank H. Cook, asserted that the girl must have been temporarily insane. The mother, who is shaken with grief, said:

"My daughter was a good girl, she had worried because her father had lost his place and had overworked in an attempt to take care of her better position."
 The Brooklyn dispatches also said that the Brooklyn detective bureau had begun an investigation to determine whether there had been any violation of the Mann act relating to

U. S. NAVAL FIRING SQUAD GIVING LAST HONORS TO JAPANESE COMRADE

Transportation of girls for unlawful purposes.

The discovery of the girl's body was made by school children eldest at the moment when Virginia Mayo, the girl's employer, had signed a written statement, according to the police, in which he is claimed to have admitted a strange, dual life. Mayo has since denied he made the statement.

In this statement, the police say, he admitted that Miss Cook was formerly an employee and the friend of Miss Lois Waterbury, who was maintained in a handsome home owned by him in Brooklyn. In this statement Mayo denied vigorously that he knew anything of the disappearance of Miss Cook.

He is also said to have admitted the pendency of Miss Waterbury's two children, and that Miss Waterbury was Miss Cook's predecessor as his stenographer.

Mayo created no little sensation by this alleged statement, inasmuch as he maintains a residence next door to his radiator plant, in which lives his legal wife.

Word that the body had been found reached police headquarters, before Mayo had left. He was in Westport Park twenty minutes later. A group of children stood in a circle about the body, and looked over the fence. Then he covered his eyes with his hand, and returned immediately to his automobile.

It is said the body has been found, was the only comment he was heard to make.

The body was found within twenty feet of the edge of the park road close by the famous Jada's cave of Colonel Dwyer. Boy scouts and police had scoured the park several times. It is considered strange that the body was not discovered immediately, although there is no evidence yet that it was not there for the seven days the girl has been reported missing.

The body was half-hidden in a clump of bushes. Under it was found the .32-caliber revolver, one chamber discharged. In a nearby bag on the wrist was a poison tablet and a small sum of money. The coat had been opened, and the shirtwaist turned away at the front, before the shot was fired which is believed to have killed her. Her hat was found some distance away.

The first impression of suicide was given weight by the stories told by her friends that she had been money and had threatened to commit suicide. These friends declared that she was in poor health.

One of them, a Miss Helen Wilson, had told the police that she went to Miss Cook's room, about six months ago, and found her facing the mirror a revolver in her hand, as if looking for a good place to shoot. Miss Wilson declared she said:

"The day when Miss Cook dropped out of sight she went to her room and left a note for Miss Wilson, asking her to come over and see her jewelry to her mother. She was seen leaving the building with a package under her arm. Those who believe that the girl is a suicide argue that this package contained the very revolver which was found under her body in the park."

U. S. NAVY HONORS A JAP COMRADE

Osakuma Okamoto, a Japanese who was in the United States navy for eighteen years and who was killed at the battle of Iwo Jima when the famous "Bob" Evans was in command, was buried today with military honors in the cemetery on the grounds of the Chelsea Naval Hospital.

Funeral services were held in the hospital hall, Rev. O. Edgar Folk of the Robinson Methodist Church of Malden officiating. From the hall marines bore the casket to a carriage and there was an escort of honor of other marines from the cruiser Brooklyn in command of J. A. Bush. The coffin was draped with an American flag.

The marine guard fired three volleys over the grave and then taps were sounded by Bugler John Piccini, Okamoto belonged to the Thomas J. Whitten Camp, Spanish War Veterans and a detail of members of the camp attended the funeral. The camp also sent two large floral displays.

Okamoto died at the naval hospital yesterday. He had been ill for two months. His last service in the navy was on the scout cruiser Chester. He was forty-five years of age and is survived by a mother in Japan.

Harvard Man Raps Cambridge "Ring"

That the fair city of Cambridge "has been controlled by a corrupt Democratic ring for years and that it has gained the reputation of being one of the worst governed cities in the country" is the charge made by Charles M. Rogers, Harvard graduate and now in the business school administration at Harvard. Rogers, writing to the Harvard Crimson says that the dear old student of Harvard can perhaps put the University City back in the clean government column.

U. S. RESCUES 2 JAILED DIPLOMATS

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Prominent action by Captain George Williams of the United States cruiser Cleveland has secured the release from jail at Manzanilla, Mex., of a British vice consul, a Spanish vice consul and another subject of Spain.

Captain Williams steamed into the port of Manzanilla, which is in control of the Carranza forces, and notified the authorities the men were under his protection and demanded their release.

Captain Williams is a famous dispatch to the Navy Department says "The three men are now on board the Cleveland."

The men were arrested originally at Acapulco, on orders of Carranza, ten days ago. One of them, named Fernandez, is British vice consul at Acapulco. Another, also named Fernandez, said to be a brother, is Spanish vice consul at that town. The third person is Juan Pano.

Course of arrest is not revealed, but it is known the British and Spanish governments have taken no matter with the State Department. When the British government was broken at Acapulco Carranza arrested the prisoners and the Manzanilla. This caused the state department to ask the navy to act.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to flush Kidneys if back hurts or Bladder bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost narrows the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaker, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or a sore headache, stiffness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The uric acid, cloud, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's uric acid, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will be all right. The uric acid salts made from the ancient grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness, kidney inflammation, and the backache is unexpressed, suffering from lithia-water drink. War Leads to Romance of Miss Britton Will Wed the Brother of Lord Decies

Met "Bobby" Beresford, her Fiance, While Sailing to Become a War Nurse.

Society all over the country is interested in the engagement of Miss Catherine Britton of Washington to become a war nurse.

"Bobby" Beresford, former light-weight amateur champion boxer of England, and a younger brother of Lord Decies, the husband of the former Vivian Gould.

Miss Britton, who is a favorite in the Washington social set, is now in the European war zone getting on a nurse. She sailed recently with Miss Nona McAdoo, daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Young Beresford, it is said, met Miss Britton on board the steamship, when she and Miss McAdoo sailed to become nurses. The two girls are now running a hospital at a villa loaned them by a prominent Frenchman. In the last few months they have nursed many wounded soldiers of all the nations involved in the conflict.

PAVLOWA PLEAS IN A NEW BALLET

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

There was a very brilliant and most encouraging large audience on hand to see Pavlova and her Russian slake present a ballet, now to American, called "Raymonda," at the Metropolitan Theatre last night.

"Raymonda" was arranged by Ivan Clustine, like so many others of the Pavlova repertory, and the music is by Alexandre Glazounoff, whose serious music is not unknown in this country.

The scene is laid in southern France in the thirteenth century. Raymonda is a beautiful girl betrothed to a crusader. To her castle comes a Moorish knight who is in love with her beauty and who offers her his hand. She spurns him and he starts a rebellion. The spirit of the castle which she loved the White Lady. When they fall on the wall for five days (illusions and drama). Raymonda from her mother's tomb and into a beautiful garden. The second act shows the garden filled with flowers and good and evil spirits. The Moor returns and attempts to carry Raymonda away. He finally succeeds, but she is not really dead, she is only dreaming. The ballet is excellently staged, and the dance are finely arranged, if they do exhibit nothing in the choreographic art.

The music of Glazounoff, while brilliant and melodious, is not of the highest level of the choreographic art. Pavlova dances with the ballet with her characteristic grace and art. Miss Pavlova and Kallie disappointed themselves.

FOOD SOURING IN STOMACH CAUSES INDIGESTION, GAS

"Pape's Diapiesin" ends all stomach distress in five minutes.

Wonder what upset your stomach?—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt, if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stinking fumes, head dizzy and aches, belch acids and acids and eructate undigested food, heart, vomit, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapiesin, and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapiesin unconsciously keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal diet without rebellion, if your food is a damage instead of a pleasure, remember, Pape's Diapiesin, which comes in a little box for a large case of drugs, stores, it's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and so quickly that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, discontented stomach. It's so unnecessary. For sale by druggists and all good druggists—Advertisement.

Isabel and John Have a Real Quarrel About Adelaide Simmons.

ISABELL HAMILTON changed color as her husband told her again that Adelaide Simmons was his friend. She spoke in low voice, and every word was distinct and cold.

"You remind me of that fact too often for me to be allowed to forget it," she said.

"What do you mean?" John asked, though his manner showed that he knew already what she meant.

"I mean that this is the second time within less than a fortnight that you have warned me that Adelaide Simmons was your friend," she re-

"You made such reminder necessary," he accused.

"How?"

"By slighting her and by making plain your dislike of her," he answered.

"In spite of which, fact," she retorted, "you force her upon me by insisting that I see her when she calls and by accepting an invitation for me to accompany you to her house without so much as consulting me. Of course, I am only your wife, but I have some rights to consideration!"

The battle was on now, and the

"We may as well understand each other," John Hamilton said. "Please sit down so that we can talk more comfortably."

"Comfortably," the wife repeated sarcastically. Yet she obeyed him. John, John, himself, remained standing.

"Now," he began, "we'll talk this over without temper on either side. I don't want to quarrel with you, but with anger. I wish you to tell me here and now what you have against Adelaide Simmons."

"I don't know," he said unthinkingly. "I have not forgotten," he said, "that ten days ago you forbade me to mention her to you until she had been married."

"I don't know," he said, "of her. Unless you withdraw that

"And you see Mrs. Simmons last before this morning?"

John's eyes left hers for a moment. "One day last week," he replied.

"Where?" she asked.

He hesitated. "Why," he stammered, "I met her on the street."

"That was the time before the last," she corrected. "Remember, we are speaking the truth now."

"Well," defiantly, "I went up to call on her. Had you seen her when she came here," he added by way of justification, "I need not have gone. But I didn't meet her up and explain why you did not see her when she called."

"And you gave her a satisfactory explanation. May I ask what it was?"

"Yes," he said, "I stood by you."

course, I said that you had been fast asleep and that by the time you were dressed well enough to answer the bell she had left. I even told her she was mistaken when she said she knew you were looking out of the window at her—that she saw the curtain move as she glanced up at the house."

Isabel's face underwent a swift transformation. Rising from her seat, she laid her hand on her husband's arm.

"John," she said, "I am sorry I put you in a position where you had to tell me the truth. And I did look out of the window after Mrs. Simons."

"Oh, what's all right about me?" she asked him. "You're way more than a little husky, and his expression, too, was less hard than it had been. "I don't mind any of it now, dear," he said. "I'm used to it." But she could only be reasonably sure that he really was reasonable and not get jealous of her perfectly good woman."

HIS REQUESTS THAT SHE BE RESPONSIBLE

There was a pause, while I thought fast. Then she asked her husband the question that had been in her mind for several hours.

"John," she said, "why did you not tell me you had gone to see Mrs. Simpson?"

"You did not ask me," he replied. "And if I had asked you?"

He regarded her gravely. "Labels," he said, "are like John. They are not to be taken off."

A PURELY PERSONAL MATTER

"It is one of the personal—or domestic—affairs not mentioned in the contract," declared Johns, blandly.

"Well, by—!" thundered the outraged "master."

"Hold on there!" called the other servant. "What, in a moment, he remembered to go on in the tone of a servant instead of as a man who is responding angrily to threats of punishment. "Remember, sir, that any excessive roughness on the part of the master would be a violation of the contract. Do you get that?"

"Yes, I get you—and I'm going to get you by the scruff of the neck!"

"Well, that's all right," said Nettleton, started to make good his intention.

But before he could do so, a servant Nellie appeared on the stairs and said that the lady had a present which would look like an intent to murder.

"What? Why, you look as if you were going to fly at each other's throats!"

"Believe me, Nellie—it was not his fault. He was a little strained from overwork at the office. I'll have him down with intent to instill a little peace."

"Oh! Oh, yes. Now, George, dear."

"Well, You told him to do it, didn't you? In fact, you GAVE him the duster on his birthday," said Nellie, in a voice that might have been oil on troubled waters.

Plymouth Is Stirred by 'Pilgrim' Film Point to Errors in 'Landing' Pictures

PLYMOUTH, March 5.—Plymouth folk are agitated these days at what they say is a misrepresentation of the story in a moving picture film taken by the Plymouth company, for today at the Plymouth Fair Exposition and entitled "The Landing of the Pilgrims." The Plymouth folk point to certain scenes in the film as being entirely inaccurate, but the company insists that the film is a correct representation of the story. No War Blockade Can Seriously Injure the American People

The United States Alone Can Produce All the Necessaries of Life—The American Hemisphere Can Supply Food, Clothing and Building Materials for Many Times the Population of the World

Copyright, 1915, by the Star Company.

What would be the result of a complete and effective blockade of all European ports, shutting off America absolutely from commerce with the countries across the Atlantic?

Merely a readjustment of American business. The United States alone can produce all the necessities of life. The wealth that lies in the mines, in the grain fields, in the pasture lands and in the seas that border the coasts is sufficient to provide for the wants of the people indefinitely.

This is a self-sustaining country.

If through some upheaval of nature the Eastern Hemisphere should sink into the sea, or be buried beneath volcanic lava, the people of the Americas would continue to exist and to labor, to create wealth and to make mental and industrial and moral progress.

Should the United States alone survive some world disaster, its population could still find food to sustain it, and materials for clothing and shelter.

Incidentally the wealth of the country would be developed far more rapidly than it will be while human industry is scattered over five continents.

There is no reason to believe that there will be any effective blockade of European commerce, or that the business dependent upon American shipping will be interfered with to any disastrous extent by the war.

War is never a permanent condition. The present war must inevitably result in great benefit to American industry.

But even though it laid waste all the cities of Europe, and sent every seagoing ship to the bottom, the people of America could continue living almost exactly as before, producing themselves every article they now import from Europe, and finding abundant employment for their growing numbers in the development of their country.

America can raise wheat enough to make bread for the world. It has a coal supply sufficient to turn all the wheels of industry for many years to come, and its water power, whose development has hardly begun, will furnish abundant power and heat and light when the last ton of coal has been taken from the mines.

Already this country furnishes more than half of the world's supply of structural steel and the metals used in making all kinds of machinery from an automobile to a steam shovel that lifts hundreds of tons of earth and rock at a single sweep.

The cotton States could clothe the world alone were cotton the only material for clothing; enough sheep are raised on the Western ranges to clothe the race entirely in wool. And a little time and trouble would build up in this country a silk industry complete from the mulberry tree on which the silk worm feeds to the dyed and measured silken fabric.

As supplies which we have been in the habit of importing from Europe have been gradually cut off, America has learned to produce them on her own ground.

Only recently a scientist developed from coal tar a method of making dyes which hitherto had been made alone in Europe.

All the ingredients of gunpowder and of explosives of every sort can be produced here, and have been produced here in great quantities since the beginning of the war.

There is no food product of Europe or even of Asia that cannot be grown or manufactured in the United States, save coffee and spices and a few tropical fruits, and these can all be grown in Central and South America.

Indeed, were the boundaries of this country carried South to the Panama Canal, as it may be necessary to carry them some time, it could produce within its own limits everything that is grown in the world.

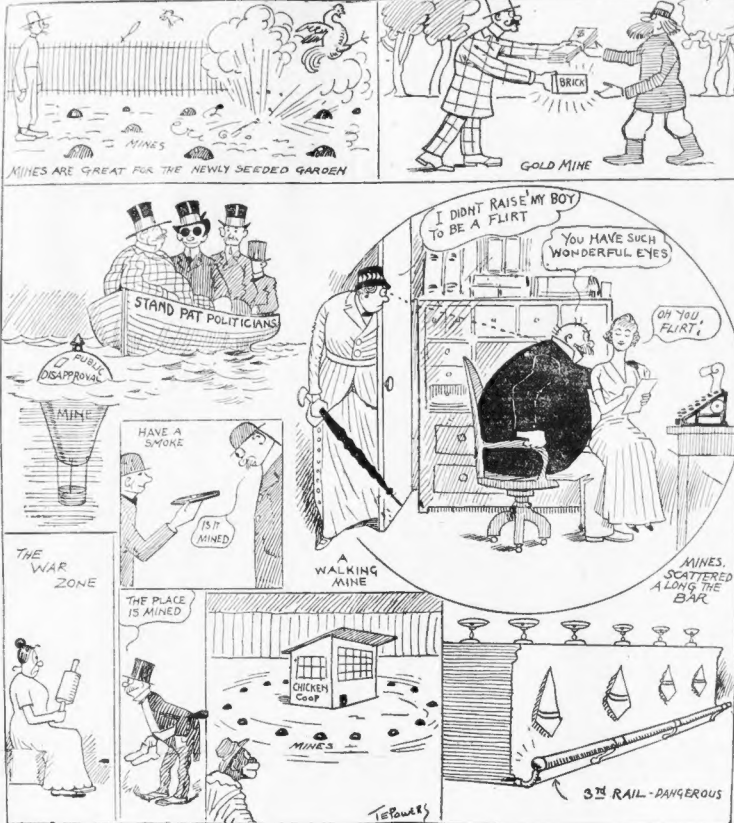

It has been said that the State of Texas could support the present population of this country. This is doubtless true, although even that great State might be a trifle overcrowded with one hundred millions of people.

But the whole country, with the marvellous resources of California on the West, the wonderful ore fields of the Middle Northwest, the lumber and grain and cattle-supporting grass and corn of the Mississippi Valley, and the cotton and tobacco and rice of the South, could feed and give profitable employment to many millions.

A blockade—of which there is small likelihood—would bring about changed industrial conditions. But immediately new industries would be created, new trades learned, new fields of endeavor opened, and in a few short years the United States would have learned the lesson of complete independence—independence, to use a phrase of which William Jennings Bryan used to be very fond, "without the aid or consent of any other nation on earth."

More Truth Than Poetry

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

The Dutch!

WHEN King Canute, knee deep in sand, upon a slippery beach
Was boasting that he couldn't see the ocean with a speech;
The Dutch were busy building dykes of mud and turf and sand
And snatching from the hungry sea large tracts of good dry land.

WHEN other folk were making roads that ran up hill and down
Over which to drag their grain and meat and lumber into town,
The Dutch dug wide and deep canals without a single grade
Which saved a gulcher to the ton on every trip they made.

WHEN other nations got fussed up and mixed up in a war
And knocked each other's churches down and shed each other's Dutch kept plodding right along about their own affairs,
And what they had before the war continues to be there.

THEY are not much for blow or show, they have no vast designs
Of roving off a conquered earth with league long battle lines,
About the things that they have done they do not bluster much,
But when it comes to common sense—you cannot beat the Dutch.

An Irish Humorist's Impressions

of America

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

CANON HANNY, who writes under the pen name of G. A. Birmingham, has some entertaining chapters in his book, "From Dublin to Chicago." Sketchy and discursive are his comments on American words, manners, dress, women and conversation, but very much to the point.

His Irish wit, keen sense of humor, light touch, whimsical and very subtle way make it doubtful sometimes whether he is as serious as he is. We must be on the alert to discern when he is laughing at us. We can see the twinkle in his eye and laugh with him. Our own sense of humor would be dull, indeed, if we did not enjoy his gentle satire and good-natured criticism.

He tells us that after a few days in our country he could understand every word that was spoken. He tried in vain to say "very" and "America" as these words are said. "Very" and "America" were like the sound.

Familiar words were used in strange ways. "Through" is a word he knows, and "correct" he has seen in books on agriculture, but he was puzzled one morning at breakfast when the maid with her eye on his porridge plate, asked whether he was "through with the cereal."

He discovered that "right here," "right now," "right away" were expressions having a friendliness of intention from a host's part in a hotel which the English phrase, "at once," fails to convey. Even when you wait several hours before you get your luggage you know that every effort is being made to meet your wishes. The American has a history of vigorous courtesy at command which is not to be meted out to the ordinary man.

When he complained in a hotel that a laundry had failed to return his clothes, the "highly vital young lady" who controlled all the telephone called the receiver and promised to "play out that laundry right now."

About manners, he finds a subtle difference in the spirit of the various politenesses which men observe toward women. A well-mannered Englishman rises and opens the door for a woman when she leaves a room. He does a well-mannered American.

The Englishman hands tea, bread and butter or cake to a woman before any of these things for himself. So does the American. But with the Englishman this is done according to the theory of civility, the homage of the strong to the weak, the superior to the inferior. The American shows reverence, the respect of civility—not the homage of the strong to the weak, but the homage of the inferior to the superior.

Canon Hanny declares that he would choose to be born an American if the crowd of successive incarnations were true.

Women in "the States" he thinks "charming." Earnest knights errant sometimes rode about, redressing human wrongs. Women made all about themselves, and men, others were "highly cultivated" while he was only an ignorant, stupid man. Others, without being particularly cultured, were brilliant.

The American woman, he declares, understands the art of putting on her clothes, and the art of talking well on all subjects. He declares to have no art in conversation, and feels sorry for the two women who are beside him at a dinner party, but the American woman makes a man think she is actually enjoying herself. But she is so wise that she makes her dinner short. She does not attempt a long-drawn-out conversation with the stupidity of the ordinary man.

"She flashes, sympathizes, subtly flatters, talks with amazing brilliancy, charm. Then she says:—"

"If you ever want another man's wife, Hugh, Gawd help him!"

No Creature So Helpless as Middle-Aged Woman
Accustomed to Luxury, Who Suddenly Loses Her Money and Is Thrown on Her Own Resources

By DOROTHY DIX

THE old adage, "a fool and his money are soon parted," is particularly true when the fool is of the feminine persuasion, and has reached the years of indolence.

A pertinent and pathetic illustration of this fact is furnished by a case which recently occupied the attention of the courts, in which a widow past middle age sought to recover by law some of the money out of which she was fleeced by a man who duped her absolutely from the way he was robbing her by making love to her.

This woman's husband left her more than half a million dollars, enough to have lapped her in luxury to the longest day of her life had she taken the slightest intelligent care of it, but she appears to have turned over her valuable securities to a man who flattered her, and who was a plausible talker, with the result that now at the beginning of her old life she is a poor distracted creature, turned out of her home and being sued for bills that she has no means of paying.

It is a sad case, and one that is a warning to all women who have inherited comfortable fortunes that they have allowed themselves to be cheated out of it in some such way; yet still the most work goes on, and the woman with money continues to be fair game for anybody who is mean enough to steal from such an innocent.

Everybody knows a dozen women who have inherited comfortable fortunes that they have allowed themselves to be cheated out of it in some such way; yet still the most work goes on, and the woman with money continues to be fair game for anybody who is mean enough to steal from such an innocent.

Inasmuch as women apparently have not enough money sense to keep themselves from becoming the victims of sharpers, it is certainly the duty of their husbands and fathers to protect them against their own folly. It's the most amazing thing in the world that a man will spend his life slaving away for his wife and children, to say up money for his wife and children, so that they may be safe from need after he is dead, and then that he never does the first thing to try to teach them how to take care of what he leaves them, but turns them over to the tender mercies of whoever winds up his estate. Which is like turning a lamb over to the care of a ravening wolf.

Most women would be good business women if they had any training along business lines. And the reason for this is because a woman is a safe investment and a wild speculation and he made to understand that anything that offers over 4 or 5 per cent interest is a good thing for a woman to let alone.

Also she can be taught never to sign her name to any paper whose contents she doesn't thoroughly understand, and that because she makes love to her, or prays a beautiful prayer in church, is no reason for doing so. And she can have the fear of losing her money sealed into her very soul, and conservatism in the beginning of wisdom in financial matters for women.

Men Who Know Wives Are Incompetent Should Safeguard Their Future

If a man realizes that his wife is utterly incapable of understanding business propositions, and if he knows that she is credulous and "easy," then he has just one duty, and that is to leave his estate in the hands of some one of the big trust companies to manage. In that way, and that way only, can he safeguard her future.

Either teach your wife how to handle her own money intelligently, Mr. Man, or else put it out of her power to be robbed of it by the first good-looking confidence man who comes along and tries to tell her out of your hard-earned dollars. So shall you save her from becoming that most pitiable of all figures, a helpless old woman, who has always had plenty, and who comes to want in her old age.

Robbing Women Is About the Easiest Thing Bad Men Can Do

On the contrary, women are the easy marks of the world, and robbing them is just about as difficult as taking candy away from a sick baby.

They will sign any sort of paper without reading it or understanding it. They will give their good money into any kind of wild speculation, if the man who is producing the picture is a good-looking confidence man who has always had plenty, and who comes to want in her old age.
